We expect the Central Bank to maintain the current policy rates in the near future given the improving macro conditions.

Slowdown in GDP growth and slowing down in credit growth (15.4% YoY in November 2017 after hitting a peak of 28.5% in July 2016) reflects weakening overall demand in the economy. The slowdown in credit growth and the existing government security maturities is currently increasing the existing liquidity level and that is why the market rates are coming off at the moment.

Gross official reserves remained strong at USD 7.9 billion in December 2017. However, during the next 12 months period the expected net drain in foreign reserves is around USD 6.6 billion (both principal & interest payments). The remaining tranches of IMF extended funding facility, balance payments of the Hambantota port sale deal will help the Central Bank to manage the foreign dollar outflows in 2018. But the cost of rollover of existing debt will be challenging if US and other regional interest rates increase in during the year. Adverse weather conditions can worsen the situation further causing higher import demand.

On this back drop we do not expect the Central Bank to cut policy rates in the near future and in the second half interest rates can slightly pick up due to external factors. Therefore, the fund will maintain a short maturity profile to get the benefit if interest rates move upwards in the second half.
