We expect the Central Bank to maintain the current policy rates in the near future. However, we expect market rates (fixed deposit rates etc.) to come down due to the building up in excess liquidity in the system.

Slowdown in GDP growth and slowing down in credit growth (14.6% YoY in December 2017 after hitting a peak of 28.5% in July 2016) reflects weakening overall demand in the economy. The slowdown in credit growth and the existing government security maturities is currently increasing the existing liquidity level and that is why we expect market rates are come off at the moment.

Gross official reserves remained strong at USD 7.9 billion in December 2017. However, during the next 12 months period the expected net drain in foreign reserves is around USD 6.6 billion (both principal & interest payments). The remaining tranches of IMF extended funding facility, balance payments of the Hambantota port sale deal will help the Central Bank to manage the foreign dollar outflows in 2018. But the cost of rollover of existing debt will be challenging since US has indicated a 1% rate hike in 2018 after the latest FOMC meeting (revised up from previous 75 basis) and other regional countries has also signaled that they will also increase their rates in line with US rate hike. Adverse weather conditions and rising fuel prices can worsen the situation further causing higher import demand.

On this back drop we do not expect the Central Bank to cut policy rates in the near future and in the second half interest rates will remain flat if central bank manage the drain in foreign reserves, unless there is a possibility for rates to go up.

Therefore, the fund will maintain a short maturity profile to until the second half of 2018.
